which were Granada and the Alhambra.

Mrs. Robinson had been invited to talk to the ladies on the subject of The Alhambra. She first read a paper, which was followed by informal discussion, and the exhibition of pictures, illustrating the architectural beauties of this wonderful pile.

In her paper Mrs. Robinson recounted the early history of the Moors, their invasion of Spain, and their final settlement at Granada, where they founded a kingdom. The speaker showed how the civilization which they attained was most remarkable, surpassing that of England during the same period. Their artistic ideas reached a culmination in this fortress, which contained the palace of the ancient kings of Granada, and required one hundred years for its construction.

Mrs. Robinson took the ladies through the principal entrance, over which one reads the inscription: There is no God but Aliah, and Mohammed is his prophet.

The speaker described the method of construction and materials used, and explained the form of architecture employed, so that her hearers felt that they had indeed visited this beautiful valley and felt the fascination of the Alhambra's grandeur.

Many questions were answered and the photographs which Mrs. Robinson had obtained in Spain were described in detail, and all too soon the delightful hour came to a close.

This was followed by a social hour, when refreshments were served on the
